

Handle Fevers with Homeopathy, Not Drugs

As a parent, is there anything more frightening than a young child with a high fever? Even those of us who have decided to raise our children without the use of drugs could find our resolve weakening without proper preparation in the face of a thermometer reading north of 103°. Before you grab the Tylenol, take the time to memorize these three fever remedies.

This is the whole point of my recently introduced system How to Raise a Drug Free Family. We owe it to our families to learn this stuff now, before the fever hits or the flu appears.

Here's my easy to remember ABC guide to treating fevers with homeopathy:

A) Aconitum 30: This remedy is useful for a fever with quick onset. In contrast to an illness that develops over several days, fevers that can be helped with Aconitum are suddenly high. However, if you don't catch the fever within the first 12 hours of illness, don't bother with this remedy. It won't be the correct choice at that point.

B) Belladonna 30: If the fever is very high, think Belladonna. The child's face might be flushed bright red from the heat and his eyes may be glassy with dilated pupils. He may even appear delirious.

C) Chamomilla 30: Chamomilla is an extremely useful remedy for fevers accompanying teething. The child who needs Chamomilla is fractious, unable to be comforted, and irritable. He may beg to be picked up, but then demand to be put down again. If you see a child arching his back in frustration while being held, this is a good indication that Chamomilla is the remedy required.

Give a dose of your chosen remedy every 3 hours up to 4 doses and stop as soon as there's improvement. If your child falls asleep, that's a great sign that you've probably selected the proper remedy. If the fever has returned when he awakens, then continue using that same remedy.

If you've selected correctly, you'll witness a thing of beauty. Remember, we're really not treating a fever; we're just using the characteristics of it to help us determine the remedy that needs to be used to treat the child as a whole.

The fever will inadvertently melt away, but more importantly, the child will be well—most noticeably in his demeanor. If you don't see this occur, then you've chosen incorrectly or not used the correct procedure because homeopathy ALWAYS works when the remedy is right on. There you have it! Now you're a fever expert.

Just a gentle reminder that if you find this kind of information useful , then consider studying with a select group of mothers and others in my year long system; How to Raise a Drug Free Family. I promise you'll love what you and your family will get out of this.
