

Scratch, Scratch, Itch, Itch: Homeopathy Relieves Dandruff

Violet was facing a dilemma.

She had dandruff.

Not much of a problem, you say?

Well, in her case it was. Violet has owned a beauty salon for 20 years. She fashioned herself an expert on every skin and hair product on the market.

The anti-aging creams, acne gels, hair lighteners, hair dyes, dandruff shampoos: she had tried and applied them all.

Yet over the years, her skin grew dry, and she had an increasingly itchy scalp, complete with embarrassing white flakes.

For all her expertise, nothing seemed to help.

But that wasn't all of her dilemma. Violet's friend Nora was studying homeopathy. Nora had struggled for years with a gastrointestinal problem and food intolerances and finally found relief through homeopathy.

She was so smitten with her results that she started to take courses and shared what she learned with Violet.

Nora kept telling her that she should never put anything on her skin that she wouldn't eat. The skin is the largest organ in the body and the main defense system between the internal organs and the outside world. It also absorbs everything put on it, with as much efficiency as the stomach and intestines absorb what is eaten.

Barraging or even occasional usage of unnatural products, as well as steroid creams and other drugs, put the body into overload trying to deal with the toxins while driving the condition deeper into the body. This condition in turn would eventually return, or worse yet, convert into a more serious form.

Halfheartedly, Violet examined the ingredients in the products she was using and discovered that every one of them included unpronounceable and questionable ingredients: chemicals, artificial fragrances, dyes and preservatives.

And so Violet had to face the unpleasant truth that much of her career had centered on products and procedures that did more harm than good.

Thus, her dilemma: Should she abandon everything she knew about beauty products?

More importantly, what would happen to her health if she did not? Would her dandruff and minor skin ailments eventually turn into something much worse?

Nora's most recent course on homeopathy taught her that Antimonium crud 6, taken twice daily, was what her teacher called the Banerji Protocol for dandruff.

What did Violet have to lose? First, the flaking became less prominent; then the itching subsided. Within a few months, her scalp felt more comfortable ... something she hadn't experienced in years.

She dumped her chemical-laden beauty products, as she espoused a new lifestyle and was hooked.

She too began to study homeopathy along with Nora and committed to learning about products that were safe to put on her skin: things like goat's milk soap and coconut oil as a moisturizer and conditioner.

She even rubbed unsalted butter on her hands and found it to be soothing and one of the best hand lotions she ever used!

She also found a whole new world of beauty products that didn't involve expensive creams and perfumed shampoos.

Her discoveries were so captivating she converted her beauty salon into all-natural products.

Sure, some people didn't like it, and she lost a few clients, but she found a whole new following of people who were looking for a better way to be beautiful.

And now, when Violet faces a health problem, whether an injury, an upset stomach, a fever, the flu or a rash, instead of robotically reaching for an over-the-counter drug or scheduling a doctor's appointment, she visits her homeopathy kit and refers to her small library of books for sound advice.

She is thrilled with the independence it gives her, not to mention the money she saves on drugs and visits to doctor's offices.

Violet's dilemma has taken her to new heights with her skin, her overall well-being, renewed fortitude and an edge on the beauty market. She owes it all to an itch to move her forward ... and homeopathy.

Like marbles in a bag, when problems rub together, they polish each other and allow an overall solution to emerge.

Violet saw that her past poor health decisions do not have to influence her future. She cured her chronic skin condition with a practical homeopathic protocol that she didn't learn from her dermatologist, but from a friend.

That's the way it is. This information is handed from one woman to another. From one family to another.
