5. Pharmaceuticals: How to Antidote Poisonous Toxins With Homeopathy Series

As we continue with our list of toxins, let's talk about pharmaceuticals. Drugs of commerce. Synthetic, patented medicaments with side effects galore. Whatever one calls them, many folks in the white coats swear by them … to the exclusion of other alternatives.

"Got a problem? Here's a prescription."

"Oh, you're suffering from a new condition resulting from that other pharmaceutical? Whoops! Here's another prescription to suppress that side effect."

Lather, rinse, repeat.

But I'm happy to report that I am seeing more and more health care professionals join The Academy of Practical Homeopathy®.

Not all folks wearing white coats are simply writing prescription after prescription. Good doctors are out there. Ardently seek them.

Many drugs are toxic, even when used according to directions. That's what side effects are: toxic responses to an unnatural, poisonous substance.

Indeed, we can justify such poisonings when there is no choice. For example, when surgery is truly required, any sane person would hope general or local anesthesia would be employed. No one wants to be wide awake while having pins inserted into a shattered leg from a car accident. The patient would desperately want to benefit from the side effect of anesthesia drugs: unconsciousness.

And yes, unconsciousness, in this case, is an intended side effect. For example, MIT says, "… the drug propofol induces unconsciousness by disrupting the brain's normal balance between stability and excitability. The drug causes brain activity to become increasingly unstable, until the brain loses consciousness."[1]

The drug's effect is causing brain activity to become unstable. The side effect is losing consciousness.

That's how many drugs of commerce work. So, let's consider ailments resulting from drugs. Users think they're only getting one thing, yet the consequences of each drug can cascade.

However, before we proceed, please stop and read the important foundational information in this series' introduction: How to Successfully Antidote Poisonous Toxins with Homeopathy.

Utilizing Nux vomica to antidote extensive drug use

Many people know about Nux vomica because it is such a ubiquitous remedy. However, it's the most noted remedy for people who have been on too many drugs.

As a matter of fact, Nux vomica was the very first medicine that a homeopath gave me back in the 1980s because I had been taking so many drugs. Now, I had not been taking Ativan or any amphetamines, but I'd been taking a lot of allergy drugs, antibiotics, and you-name-it.

I employed Nux vomica 200C, and it was glorious. The change was gobsmacking. I felt much better within a couple of days. It was beyond my comprehension.

So, consider Nux vomica 200C (generally utilized twice daily until very much better) when someone's system has been systematically attacked by the use of too many drugs. That applies to prescription drugs as well as over-the-counter medicaments and even recreational street drugs.

On March 17, 2025, I devoted my Monday Night Live to this topic – primarily focusing on the overuse of stimulants, amphetamines and psychotropic drugs. I hope you will listen to it after you read this post for more information about the abilities of Coffea cruda and Avena sativa to antidote the effects of those drugs.

But before you go, let's focus on one more application for Nux vomica as an antidote to pharmaceuticals.

Utilizing Nux vomica after surgery

Going back to our necessary surgical example, the patient luckily received anesthesia as the shattered bone fragments were put back in position and pinned (an open reduction and internal fixation). Whew! No one would want to be awake for that.

However, unfortunately, as a result of the drugs utilized, the patient now also has a tremendous headache, nausea and constipation – common side effects of general anesthesia.

Again, this can be a call for Nux vomica. A few doses, hours or days after surgery, will restore the person back to square one and on their way to recovery.

Again, there is a time and a place for medicines of commerce – when necessary. However, I believe that homeopathy is the safest, gentlest and most effective solution for combatting the side effects of toxic medicaments.

Practical Homeopathy®

Homeopathy is a solution that doesn't require keeping up with all the latest science on genetics, technology, molecular biology, chemistry and clinical tests. It's a solution you can do yourself without needing a graduate degree in biology.

It's a solution that doesn't come with myriad side effects. It's God's medicine.

To assure you that this true solution does exist, I designed an infographic called "Toxins Don't Scare Me Anymore!" This infographic contains eight common toxins and eight corresponding homeopathic medicines. Click here to download your free copy.
