7 Undeniable Reasons for Moms to Know How to Cure the Family Themselves

Last Sunday when my family came over for our usual Sunday dinner, something occurred to me that I'd like to share with you.

My father, who's in his late 80s complained that he was coming down with a doozy of a cold. He was chilled and achy.

I gave him Hepar sulphuris calcareum 200C and Sanguinaria canadensis 200C mixed together in a little water.

Roasted Potatoes

This is one of my favorite homeopathic combinations that I learned from the Banerjis for onset of a cold with these symptoms. I wrapped a blanket around him and merrily got on to preparing the roast potatoes in lard without another thought of it.

Shortly, our oldest son came home with a mild, yet painful ski injury. Out came the Arnica montana 200C and Symphytum officinale 200C to be alternated between the two, every few hours.

Again, back to cooking.

My cousin arrived with a headache and once again, back to my homeopathy kit and Picricum Acidum 30C with Belladonna 6C.

Lest you think I have a family of sicklings, consider how often someone is suffering in a group of about 15 people. Once you become the family healer, they seem to come out of the closet!

But, what struck me that afternoon, was not how quickly, safely and efficaciously the remedies worked (I've come to expect that as have they), but how happy and satisfied it made me feel.

The payoff was as great for me as it was for those whose suffering had been relieved.

And that got me thinking …

I'm always teaching moms how to use homeopathy and expound on homeopathy's effectiveness, but I don't often tell of the benefit to the healer.

So in honor of Mother's Day, I thought I'd share some of the payoffs you'll see as the family healer using homeopathy.

Benefit #1: You'll get results. (And I mean BIG results.)

Can I guarantee perfect outcome every time? Of course not! But the more you use the methods I teach, the greater your results will be. This is not just for acute problems anymore. In this blog and in my courses, I teach how to treat chronic illnesses, too.

Benefit #2: You'll be happy! (Do NOT underestimate the value of this! It should probably be #1.)

Whether you have a brood of 12 or have the charge of only a cat, unless you have a clear sense of accepting your mission, nothing you do will make you happy. And being happy enriches your life as well as those around you. This in turn enhances others. When you truly love what you do, it spurs you on to do more and more and more. Finding happiness in purposeful work such as this is one of the joys that make a mother's life rich.

Benefit #3: Your mothering ability makes you charismatic

Once you cinch this and learn just enough curing ability, your skill will leak into the world around you. You become more charismatic. Your kids, spouse, friends, colleagues, and neighbors pay more attention to what you say. Your family grows pride in your accomplishments. People actually become drawn to you. (Pssst … I'll share one of my secrets for keeping my adult children in regular contact: They call me when they or even their friends are sick. I love it.)

Benefit #4: One success breeds another and another.

Once you "get" this curing stuff under your belt, you'll find it to be the perfect extension of being a wife, mother, daughter, sister, friend, etc. Being able to cure my family as well as teach it to others has transformed my life. The confidence it has given me not only in this work but in other areas of my life has advanced my life in unpredictable ways.

For example, presently, my husband and I are renovating a small inner-city warehouse as I write this. The decisions that need to be made come faster, with more poise than previous years. Is this because of my knowledge of and successes in homeopathy? Perhaps. There's no doubt that one success breeds the next, which spurs on the next. I have confidence and comfort in my choices because I've proven to myself that I make good decisions. I've gone from "We'll see." to "You bet I can!"

Benefit #5: Resourceful moms know how to turn something bad into something good.

Creativity and resourcefulness are born out of the ability to see opportunity. And knowing how to cure family ills is the ultimate in turning a downbeat situation into a learning opportunity. The next time you come across a particular illness, you'll know what to do. (Hint: Keep good notes, such as a file for each member of your family.)

Benefit #6: You'll own your life.

You get to have the life you want. You'll stop coasting through life asking others (doctors, for example) what to do. You'll actually begin to realize your true potential. Health decisions for yourself and your family that you thought were the realm of only professionals will be your domain. And it's easier than you think.

Benefit #7: Knowing you can do it.

Whatever it is you want to be you'll shortcut the whole "becoming" process by simply doing. Opening your homeopathy book, taking a course and diving in are the precursors to owning the knowledge. An ear infection? No problem, I know that Hepar sulph 200 will uproot that in my dog.

Success is a result of doing your homework.

So, is it worth spending time learning how to cure yourself and your family? You bet!

There’s nothing quite like the transformative action of taking this on. It gives us the gift of thriftiness, resourcefulness, mastery and most importantly self-sufficiency.

So, think big, Moms of the world!

And join me to transform not only the lives of those you love, but perhaps equally important, your own.
