Bob Gielo, carpenter, Miami

After surgery to correct a bone problem, my foot got an infection that lasted over a year, even though I was diligent with caring for it and took antibiotics daily*.*

The infection, however, became gangrenous and I had surgery to remove a toe and a side of my foot.

Still, the infection didn't end. It was at this time that I learned about Joette Calabrese. She educated me to the homeopathic remedies to be taken daily and a dressing to keep the area clean. She told me how a medical doctor in England used certain remedies for such situations. It was interesting, but I didn't believe it.

Within a few days, the pain subsided and the wound started to gain better color. Two or so days later, the black discoloration of the wound was gone and the outer edges began filling in with new vigor.

When I went to the doctor for a check up, they remarked on how well I was healing and gave me another prescription for antibiotics.

I told them I didn't need it because I didn't use the last one! They were flabbergasted. This was a year ago and I can happily report that the wound healed as it should have within a few weeks.

I didn't believe it at first, but homeopathic remedies are real. I should have talked to Joette right off, as I lost my toe, months of income and quality of life from wasting time with antibiotics.

Bob Gielo, carpenter, Miami