Your post was one I had researched during my pregnancy this year to create my own “repertory” of remedies to take during my labor and delivery.

And I am so thankful. My homebirth turned into a hospital birth and despite the nurse, 2 OB's, and the ultrasound tech's best efforts my placenta would not detach.

Told my husband to check my notes on placenta and he gave me caulophyllum. After 45 minutes of trying to get my placenta to detach it came out moments after taking the remedy. The doctor was shocked and asked me what I took, how did I know what to take, what was it exactly... and the nurse later came to see me during recovery to get the remedy information because she had told the other nurses what had happened and the other nurses wanted to look into it as well.

Sometimes God puts us in places we don't want to be to show there are other options. They are now looking at homeopathy in a different light.
